Nothing is more erroneous.

It will be seen that Banks only are subject to the tax, and that, not on their outstanding circulation, but only on such notes as they shall pay out. Holders of State Banks Bills, not bankers, are not subject to the tax. They may hold them, or pass them, the same as usual.

The notes of New York State Banks will be as safe and valuable after the first of July, 1866, as at any time in the past. Securities for their redemption are held by this department, and are only surrendered on the return of the notes.

· Although the banks are being legislated out of existence, their notes, as a circulating medium, will maintain their former high reputation for safety and value. There can be no safer circulation than that of our New York State Banks, and holders may rest secure, that their State money is worth dollar for dollar in legal tenders.

Our banking system, so far as Congressional legislation can do it, is to pass away, and be superseded by the National, whose highest merits rest upon the fact that it is modeled after young lady, a Miss Seivers, to whom our own.

EQUALIZING BOUNTIES .- The bounty Bill has passed the House. Those who served faithfully the period of their enlistment, or until honorably discharged, without bounty, are by this bill brought on more equal remuneration with those who enlisted under more fortunate circumstances. The gratuity of Congress is hedged around by restrictions, which will prevent bounty sharpers from robbing soldiers of the intended gift. The Senate have yet to act upon it.
