Although they have been many years organized, their contests have been a series of triumphs, and their reverses have been, like angels' visits, few and far between. As an illustration of this remark, it is only necessary to look at the club's splendid rosewood trophy case, containing some fifty balls, emblems of their prowess and skill. / The Enterprise Club was, until a season or two, in the ranks of the Junior associations, among whom they maintained a 'front seat' as a body of A 1 players. Since their debut as one of the Seniors they have won many gallant victories, and steadily added to their reputation. / ... / Of the Enterprise players, all done well at times in batting, but their fielding was far behind their standard of last season, and it plainly evinced a lack of practice. ... / ... 	obtaining a signal victory over the noted Enterprise club of Brooklyn; and it was a well deserved triumph, for never did a club strive more earnestly for success, or achieve it in a more skilful manner than did the Eureka on this occasion. ... The Enterprise club possesses, in the person of their pitcher [Earl], a player physically capable of making himself preminent in the position, but until he adds regularity of delivery, and capacity to control the direction of the ball thoroughly, to the power he possesses of pitching a swift ball, he need never hope to become a second Creighton. Merely swift pitching is "played out," speed alone is of no advantage unless accompanied with regular delivery and considerable twist to the ball, in which case it becomes very effective, otherwise a more moderate speed with these other requisites is far preferable. We were a little surprised to see such an experienced ball player as Mr. A. B. 		throwing to the bases, and decide it as 'no baulk.' According to our reading of the rule on the subject, a plainer baulk was never made than the movement of Earl in this match. True, he does not "draw back his hand," but he unquestionably 'moves with the apparent purpose and pretension of delivering the ball,' and then turns and throws it to the base, and if this does not constitute a baulk, we know not what does. Mr. Taylor was evidently in doubt on the subject, because once, when appealed to, he replies as before 'no baulk,' but added, sotto voce, 'unless all are baulks,' which they undoubtedly were. / The assemblage of spectators to witness this match was the most numerous of the season, ...")

The weather was very unfavorable, a drizzling rain falling during the whole of the afternoon; but the Stars, having made it a rule never to put off a regularly advertised game if it is possible to play it, undertook to commence play, even at the expense of a thorough wetting, and under circumstances that rendered the playing of the match the very reverse of pleasure. Of course, the ball became soaked and heavy, and fielding was soon a somewhat dangerous occupation, as far as stopping swiftly thrown or batted balls was concerned. Nothing daunted, however, the plucky contestants went to work, and for the first two or three innings, the game bid fair to be quite an interesting one, despite the adverse circumstances under which it was played.
