Gillem refuses to recognize this Committee, they intend to call upon Congress to sustain their acts and to complete the work of reconstruction in Mississippi by, appropriate legislation. In addition to this several of the Southern States have recently made requisitions on the Secretary of War for arms, under a law passed in 1796, but the Secretary has declined to furnish them until further legislation is held on the subject. The Governors in consequence have united in an appeal to Congress, to meet on the day to which they had adjourned, to take action in the matter.

The Tribune's special says: So far as known to night, no message was received at the War Department, inquiring why the President's order published last autumn, directing the disbanding of volunteer military organizations has not been enforced. It may be understood that when Gen. Grant transmitted to Gen. Emory, the order President, in relation to disbanding such or ganizations, Gen. Emory, endorsed on it, that the District of Washington was under martial law, and that, therefore, he did not hold that he had any authority to interfere with these organizations. This indorsement was returned to the President, , who allowed the abject to drop. The constitution guarantees to every citizen, the right to bear arms, and no law authorizes the President to interfere, unless it should happen that the local authorities should be unable to preserve the peace which has not been the case.
